The management and dissemination of BWC recordings is a rather, albeit unnecessarily, contentious issue in public safety. Whether or not the video shall be released according to the law is one matter while the decision to voluntarily release it is another. These issues are often confused with the preservation of videos as "evidence" - a separate matter altogether from public records law.

This in-depth, 2 day course, covers discussion and case studies on department transparency philosophy, the balancing of privacy issues, state open records law, BWC policy development and a recommended open records request model designed to balance state requirements without over-burdening the agency. Topics include:

- BWC Philosophy, Policy, Privacy and Procedure
- State open records law
- Balancing accountability with transparency
- Developing effective BWC policies
- Establishing an effective and efficient records release process
- And much more...

See what others have said about the training...

"Answered a lot of my public records questions and pointed out weaknesses in my policy and procedure."

"Very pleased with the time management of the class and the information I walked away with."

"Very knowledgeable."

"It was organized perfectly!"

"I learned a lot and open the door for much needed dialog in our department."

"Both instructors were extremely knowledgeable in their respective fields and even across each others fields. I was very impressed they were so well versed in the Kansas Open Records laws. It was obvious they both did a lot of research."

"The class really got into the weeds regarding the release of body worn cameras. There were great examples of when to release, when not to release and redaction."
